

PETER J. OTEY, OF VIRGINIA.

Death of the Representative of the Sixth Virginia District at His Home in Lynchburg.

Washington, May 5.—Congressman Peter J. Otey, of the Sixth Virginia district, died in Lynchburg, his home, yesterday afternoon, at half-past three o'clock. Word to this effect was received at the sergeant-at-arms' office of the house of representatives at an early hour last night. Mr. Otey had been named as a member of the committee to accompany the remains of the late Congressman Cummings to New York last night, but he notified the speaker that he was too ill to attend. Mr. Otey was a democrat.

Mr. Otey was well known in the south as a business man before he came to congress. He was interested in railroads, banking and insurance. He had been active in the politics of his state since 1869, but never held office until 1894, when he was elected to the house of representatives, since which time he had been a member of that body.

Mr. Otey was born in Lynchburg in 1840, and was graduated from the Virginia Military institute. While a cadet he participated in the defense of Virginia in the John Brown raid. After graduating, he became a civil engineer. In 1861 he joined the confederate army, and participated in the western campaign culminating at Donelson and Shiloh. Mr. Otey returned with his command after that campaign and entered the army of northern Virginia, remaining in the infantry branch until the close of the war. He was badly wounded at Newmarket. When his wounds had healed he returned and commanded a brigade under Gen. Early at Cedar Creek.
